Mystery Solutions Lab. On one of the first class periods of the year, students are paired-off and given a lab-based puzzle to solve. One in each pair is given a set of three colorless solutions, designated with numbers, the other is given a matching (but scrambled) set of solutions, designated with letters. Through careful mixing, observing, reporting and reasoning, they work together to pair up the lettered solutions to their matching numbered solutions.

The “Mystery Lab” is a laboratory experience that allows students to apply critical thinking, writing, and organic chemical laboratory skills. Students are challenged to solve a medical mystery presented as a short story that includes both situational information as well as clues to needed procedures. The students must identify which of a number of samples is tainted with a poison, separate the poison from the rest of the sample, then identify the poison using provided analytical data.

Qwerty Stevens's time-traveling adventures take him back to 1879 where he meets the great inventor Thomas Edison as he struggles to perfect his latest creation, the light bulb.

Originally published: New York: Farrar, Straus, and Giroux, 1996.

Science students are expected to produce lab reports, but are rarely adequately instructed on how to write them. Aimed at undergraduate students, Successful Lab Reports bridges the gap between the many books about writing term papers and the advanced books about writing papers for publication in scientific journals, neither of which gives much information on writing science lab reports. The first part guides students through the structure as they write a first draft. The second part shows how to revise the report and polish science writing skills as the student continues to write science lab reports.

BANNED: The Golden Book of Chemistry Experiments was a children's chemistry book written in the 1960s by Robert Brent and illustrated by Harry Lazarus, showing how to set up your own home laboratory and conduct over 200 experiments. The book is controversial, as many of the experiments contained in the book are now considered too dangerous for the general public. There are apparently only 126 copies of this book in libraries worldwide. Despite this, it's known as one of the best DIY chemistry books ever published. The book was a source of inspiration to David Hahn, nicknamed "the Radioactive Boy Scout" by the media, who tried to collect a sample of every chemical element and also built a model nuclear reactor (nuclear reactions however are not covered in this book), which led to the involvement of the authorities. On the other hand, it has also been the inspiration for many children who went on to get advanced degrees and productive chemical careers in industry or academia.

Describes the 1985 purchase of a bottle of 1787 Chateau Lafite Bordeaux for $156,000, the mysterious background of the wine, and the enigmatic wine collector who discovered the bottle, once supposedly owned by Thomas Jefferson, in a bricked-up Paris cellar.
